

SAMPLE SELF-CHECK AND WALKTHROUGH

RepCheck

Check your own public footprint before someone else does: what a search of your name turns up, sorted into what is you, what is not, and what needs a decision.

Sample user: Quinn Avery, Canada. Scan run October 15, 2026.

Sample data. Demo user shown. Screens in this packet are real screens from the OrgInsights app, captured October 17, 2026. The demo account email shown on the results screen has been masked in these copies.

THE SAMPLE CHECK

One name, one scan, six results to sort

RepCheck is the new tool in this launch. It searches public web results for your own name, groups the identity clues, separates namesakes, evaluates the tone of what it finds, and gives a practical next step for every finding. This sample is Quinn's real scan: a mild result, kept exactly as it came back.

1

The finding is retagged, not deleted. It now reads Unclear, Not You, and drops to the bottom of the list, still visible in the review.

2

Possible matches fall from 3 to 2. The signal moves from 79 to 84, and the scan history records the updated score.

The screenshot displays the RepCheck app interface. On the left is a dark green sidebar with icons for Home, Reports, Tools, Plans, and Support, and a 'QA' button at the bottom. The main content area has a light beige background. At the top, it says 'Your public footprint.' with a subtext explaining the tool's purpose. A 'LATEST SCAN' timestamp is shown. A large score of '84' is prominently displayed next to the name 'Quinn Avery' and the location 'Canada'. Below this, a 'Mostly clear, worth a review' status is shown with a brief explanation. A progress bar indicates '6 reviewed', '2 possible matches', and '0 need attention'. The 'EVIDENCE REVIEW' section shows 'Public results' with tabs for 'All', 'Attention', and 'Verify'. A specific finding is listed: 'Quinn Avery | Flickr' with a link and a brief description. Below this, there are two columns: 'WHY IT MAY MATCH' and 'PRACTICAL NEXT STEP'. At the bottom, there are two buttons: 'This is me' and 'Not me'.

THE SAMPLE OUTPUT

One page holds the whole check

The results page is the output: the signal and its counts, the evidence review with all six findings, your decisions on each one, and the scan history. Work the list, and the page updates as each possible match is confirmed or dismissed.

WHAT TO DO NEXT

Working a RepCheck result

1

Decide every possible match. Open the result, then mark it This is me or Not me. Matches stay labelled possible until you do.

- 2 Follow the next step on each finding. Every finding names one practical action: verify an account, review linked profiles, or ignore a result that contradicts your details.
- 3 Scan again before you apply. A fresh scan shows whether the signal moved, and the history keeps both results.

This sample had zero findings needing attention, so there is no fix to demonstrate. When a finding does need attention, the same per finding next step is where the work starts.

LIMITS AND METHOD

A self-check, not a background check

- Self-check only. RepCheck reviews your own public footprint. The results page says it plainly: "Public web results only. RepCheck is reputation triage, not a background check or credit report."
- The signal reflects the tone of results that appear to match you. It does not verify that a page is true or complete.
- Matches are labelled possible or unlikely until you confirm them. The tool sorts and suggests; you decide what is actually you.
- Findings link to live public pages. A namesake's public page is a real page about a real person, which is the point of separating them from your own.

ACCESS

Included on every plan

RepCheck is included on every plan, the free Snapshot included, with no usage limit. Run it before a job search, after a name change in your public profiles, or any time you want to see yourself the way a search shows you.
